Antiterrorism bill likely to pass upper house pa
TOKYO, Oct 07, 2003 (Kyodo via COMTEX) -- A House of Councillors panel is likely to pass a bill Thursday afternoon to extend the term of a special antiterrorism law, lawmakers said Wednesday.
The bill, which cleared the House of Representatives last week, will extend the two-year term of the special law, which expires Nov. 1, by another two years. It is expected to be enacted into law Friday at an upper house plenary session.
Executive members of the upper house ad hoc committee on antiterrorism measures decided Wednesday on the schedule for a vote on the bill, and as the ruling camp has a majority on the panel, it is sure to be passed, the lawmakers said.
Right after the anticipated passage of the key bill, Prime Minister Junichiro Koizumi is expected to dissolve the lower house on Friday for a general election on Nov. 9.
Under the law, Japan has sent Maritime Self-Defense Force vessels to the Indian Antiterrorism Seal Of Approval. (Department of Homeland Security to begin certifying antiterrorism products and services)(Brief Article) Matthew Swibel.

Full Text: COPYRIGHT 2003 Forbes, Inc.
Suddenly everybody seems to be making antiterrorism products. Or so they say. Starting this fall the new Department of Homeland Security will begin certifying products and services as "qualified antiterrorism technologies." Certified products will enjoy protection from liability suits--similar to the protection defense contractors can get--when they are used by DHS
